Mark Trenwith is a local comic destined for bigger things. His standup routine centres on his pursuit to be more friendly and meet friends by sending random letters and buying free coffees for strangers. He has a relaxed, natural style, loads of energy and well-written material. A young actor who plays mini-Mark was a great inclusion. It was a pity about the technical problems, which were a distraction, however Trenwith rises above it in a high-standard Fringe show worth checking out.
